

📷 Celebrity portraits by Terry O'Neill - in pictures

Terry O'Neill is one of the greatest celebrity photographers of the 20th century, and a key member of the group of portrait-takers that defined the 1960s. An exhibition at The Little Black Gallery features some of his most famous images. It can be seen at 13A Park Walk, London SW10 from 14 January to 1 March 2014

Sarah Gilbert

Tuesday 7 January 2014 14.08 GMT

< Shares 498

Comments 39

Faye Dunaway surrounded by newspapers at the Beverly Hills Hotel the morning after winning an Oscar for Network in 1977.

Frank Sinatra on the boardwalk at Miami Beach, during the filming of Lady In Cement, 1968.

Audrey Hepburn takes a break from filming Stanley Donen's 1967 film Two for the Road.

David Bowie with a large dog while shooting the artwork for his 1974 album Diamond Dogs in London.

Jean Shrimpton and Terence Stamp in 1963.

Comedians Peter Cook and Dudley Moore relaxing in a Beverly Hills swimming pool while in costume as the characters Pete and Dud, 1979.

Brigitte Bardot whilst filming The Legend of Frenchie King in 1971.

Rod Stewart poses in a leopardskin suit with a horse and foal at his home in Old Windsor, 1971.

Tony Curtis inspects his make up while starring in Richard Fleischer's film The Boston Strangler, 1968.

Richard Burton with then wife Elizabeth Taylor in his trailer on location in Hounslow, London, 1971, during the filming of Villain, directed by Michael Tuchner.

